Diseases Attributed to Birds and Their Droppings

Many birds in Utah are often carriers of parasites and may pose a serious health risk through parasites in their droppings. Here are just a few of the diseases attributed to birds and their droppings:

- Fungal infections– Primarily transmitted by seagulls; fungal infections like cryptococcosis and histoplasmosis are a serious health risk that affects an infected person's heart or lungs.

- Coli– Transmission of E. Coli through bird droppings happens when birds, like magpies, eat insects or other materials from cow manure. Droppings can then end up in local water supplies or agricultural products.
- Salmonella– Also known as simple 'food poisoning', Salmonella from bird droppings may occur when droppings dry-out and becomes dust. This dust can be sucked into air vents and then ingested if it lands on food or liquids.
- Louis Encephalitis– This terrifying disease can lead to coma and death from an inflammation of the nervous system caused by contaminated bird droppings.

Problematic Bird Species in Utah

From downtown city streets or suburban neighborhoods to rural homesteads; there are several species of birds that view human structures as an ideal habitat to build a nest. Nesting and roosting can cause a whole range of problems for people like territorial behavior, exposure to parasites and diseases, and the constant, unsightly mess from droppings. Here is a list of the most common problematic bird species in Utah:

- House sparrow – These tiny brown birds like to return to the same nesting areas every spring. This means that if the nest is built near an entryway, they will dive-bomb you and everyone who enters their territory to protect their nest. This common species is also known to displace other species like bluebirds or tree swallows from nest boxes.
- Pigeons– Feces or droppings from these medium-sized birds is not only a nuisance, it can also cause serious property damage from highly-corrosive uric acid. Unkept or feral pigeon droppings can cause wide-spread, expensive property damage in a very short amount of time.
- Woodpeckers – There are 3 common woodpecker species in Utah that can cause systematic property damage to wood siding, eaves, and utility poles. The holes left from a woodpecker can further cause water and mold damage. Property owners are all too aware of a woodpecker problem from its loud and incessant drilling and thumping.
- Starlings– These birds flock in huge numbers and that means that they pose a potential health risk from their droppings in urban areas. Agricultural property owners in Utah suffer devastating economical losses when their crops are plagued by large flocks of starlings.
- Seagulls– As the Utah state bird, the California seagull is protected by state law and federal regulations that govern migratory birds. Although the seagull saved early Utah settler's crops, their droppings can contain harmful parasites. Seagulls have been known to be aggressive and attack people, this is a problem for the cities and towns surrounding The Great Salt Lake.
