What to Look for in a Pest Control Company for Your Restaurant

Restaurants and commercial kitchens can't afford to skimp on pest control. Uncontrolled pests can contaminate food, compromise your reputation and even cause you to pay stiff health department fines. You need a company that will keep ants, cockroaches, wasps, and other insidious insects away from your business.

When looking for a good ant and cockroach pest control company, you should look for operation with experience, both in the industry and in the community. Pest control products require training and experience to be used safely and effectively. It's also important for a pest control company to use products that are safe for humans as well as the environment. This is especially crucial for a restaurant.

The United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) advises potential pest control customers to do their homework and to make sure that the company they are considering hiring has no unanswered complaints with the state's department of agriculture, state attorneys general's office or the local Better Business Bureau. At Legacy Pest Control, our record is clean.

It's also a good idea to ask for and contact names of past customers of the pest control company you are considering. You'll also want to ask the company if the company and its technicians are licensed pest control workers. It's not inappropriate or rude to ask to see documentation about this licensing.
