Why Pests Love Warehouses and Factories

Pests seem to gravitate towards sheltered areas and places that are easily accessible. That being said, warehouses and factories are where pests can live pretty rewarding lives. These buildings include large doors that are constantly open, so that means easier access for these critters. Furthermore, many warehouses and factories involve food processing, which is loved by pests around the planet. To make matters worse, warehouses are typically very large, which allows plenty of room for these pests to roam and hide. All of these factors equal an environment that is very welcoming for pests, which can lead to many problems.

Pests Found in Warehouses

While pests might be an issue in your warehouse, you may be curious about what types of pests are most common. Take a look at the typical pests found in warehouses and factories, including information on the harm they can cause:

Cockroaches

Cockroaches are one of the top pests found in any building, but especially in warehouses. While these critters are pretty ugly and gross to many, they also can carry disease and tons of bacteria that makes them even less desirable. These pests leave behind droppings that create unpleasant odors, and they can also leave disgusting spots on walls and equipment. Cockroaches are also great at hiding and can sometimes go unnoticed until large populations have grown.

Birds

Birds are another pesky pest found in warehouses, but they are typically noticed far easier than cockroaches and other small critters. High ceilings, rafters, and open beams are very inviting for birds, and their droppings can contaminate products and equipment on the warehouse floor. In addition, birds can carry very harmful diseases and cause many more issues with your business. If you need top-notch warehouse pest control services, Legacy Pest Control is here to help.

Rodents

Rodents are another type of pest commonly found in warehouses and factories. Mice and rats are some of the most common, and they tend to hide within cracks and holes around your building. And when the weather is cold, that's when these pests are in abundance given how they want to escape the weather. Their urine and droppings can contaminate products and equipment, so it's best to choose a qualified commercial pest control company like Legacy Pest Control. Our fast and professional pest control services can hunt down these rodents and put a stop to their harm quickly.
